Basic Window The basic window (see Figure 1.2), shown at the top of the workspace, is the place where you manage the image(s) that you are working on. The window appears when you open a new image, open an image and place it in a new window, copy an image to a new window, duplicate an image to a new window, or open an image that is already open in a new window. Figure 1.2 The basic window showing the history panel. If you aren't sure which image is the active image at any given time, you can use the F key shortcut to make the active image the current image. The F key opens the Find window, which gives you access to the current image, the images used to create the current image, and other images and settings. Although the basic window is the root of all operations in Photoshop, many editing functions are found in other locations in the workspace.

Q: Delete multiple rows matching number of row in SQL I have table tbl_pre pno status 1 open 2 closed 3 open 4 opened 4 closed 5 closed I have a second table tbl_status pno_status 1 open 2 closed 3 open So if two of my rows in tbl_pre have the same pno number, I want to remove the last two rows that have a closed status. So the result should look like this: pno status 1 open 2 closed 3 open How can I achieve this? Thanks A: A cross join (just putting all the values of tbl_status in one table) should do it: DELETE tbl_pre WHERE pno IN (SELECT pno FROM tbl_pre GROUP BY pno HAVING COUNT(*) > 1) AND status = 'closed'; Note: you need to put the IN clause after the where clause to make it work. Q: Difference between kosmos, cosmos and universe I understand that the word kosmos comes from the Greek cosmos, and that it is a very large, infinite, mostly empty space. I also understand that it is different from the Greek word for "world" (aeon). I recently learned about the term universe, and my understanding is that the two terms are synonymous. Having the right tools, electronics and the right mindset can help you tremendously when it comes to using your new ebike. Below are just a few of the components you should be looking into. Electronics: Although it is tempting to just buy whatever rear view mirror you see and plug it into your new ebike, there are some components that will make your life easier and the ebike more functional. Here are some of the things you should be thinking about when buying your components: Down tube angle The angle of your down tube will depend on your frame geometry. For example, if you are a longer and thinner rider, you will want to get the bike aimed more towards the center of the road rather than to the side. Conversely, shorter and wider riders may want the bike to be more on their side of the road. Levers You will have three levers on the handlebars, one for your main front brake, one for your rear brakes and one for your horn. If you are a large bike rider, you may wish to get the adjustable levers that allow for a much larger grip area. Visors Although you may not see it often, helmets are required by law in many countries. You will need to get the correct one for your country. Many countries will also require a front and rear shield. Brake levers Although you may think that your brakes are self explanatory, the levers on your brakes will depend on the brakes you have. For example, if you have disc brakes you will need a set of levers that are more suited to disc brakes. Pedal Although you will likely spend a lot of time using your feet, you will need a pedal that is suited to the activity you are planning on doing. For example, if you are going to be cruising at higher speeds, you will want to get a pedal that is more suited to that. Pedal set A pedal set refers to the pedals you have on your bike. Although many people ride with just one pedal, it is recommended you add a second, as it will make your riding more comfortable. Visor Like your helmet, the visor on your ebike will depend on your country. Although you may not need a visor when you ride in most countries, you will need one in countries where it is required. Brake Levers You may find it easier to push down on the brake levers
