Subcellular distribution and degradation kinetics of unsaturated fatty acids in the phytoplankton Rhodomonas salina. Cellular localization and degradation kinetics of free and esterified unsaturated fatty acids (FA) were determined in the marine phototrophic bacterium Rhodomonas salina. Cellular distribution of free FA was lower than that of their esterified form. The rate of FA degradation in the bacterium was higher for the free form than that for the esterified one, and the free FA were degraded about 2.5 times faster than the esterified ones. In contrast, the degradation of the bound form of unsaturated fatty acids was not observed. FA degradation appeared to be stimulated by light. Addition of cycloheximide to the culture reduced the degradation of both the free and esterified forms. On the other hand, when chloramphenicol was added, only the degradation of the free form was suppressed. Based on these results, it is concluded that the unsaturated fatty acids of R. salina are degraded via both the gamma-oxidation pathway and beta-oxidation pathway in the light. The major route of esterification of unsaturated fatty acids in the heterotrophs is the acyl-CoA synthetase, which is the rate-limiting enzyme in this process. However, the acyl-CoA synthetase from R. salina shows low affinity for long-chain fatty acids. present invention relates to a

which prevent a collision of vehicles and provide collision avoidance in a traffic system using a plurality of communication vehicles, and a system construction method thereof. In a traffic system where a plurality of unmanned (dedicated) vehicles travel along a predetermined path and information is exchanged among these vehicles, there has been proposed a method of preventing a collision of the vehicles by checking for the possibility of a collision between the vehicles every predetermined time. In a conventional traffic system, each vehicle is provided with a radar apparatus for detecting the distance to an object vehicle, a controller for checking the possibility of a collision between the vehicle and the object vehicle, and a driver's action unit for performing collision avoidance, such as a decrease in engine rotation speed, deceleration, and stopping of the vehicle. In the conventional traffic system, however, as control is performed every predetermined time, the problem of time-consuming communication and processing to determine the possibility of a collision between the vehicles takes place. In addition, each vehicle is required to have dedicated
