I really, really appreciate the random string of gifts, I'm looking forward to the thing I received last (a work of art - Paint by numbers that is!), and I'm truly grateful for the thoughtfulness of my Santa. I have a new love of travel, which is something I've been struggling with but no longer on a daily basis. My Santa literally brought me a world, just in the mail! Thank you, dear Santa. I hope that you live in a wonderful place.Q: Choosing the Right Filesystem on a Disk According to Lifehacker - Choosing the Right File System for Your Operating System? If you're building a new computer, you'll want to pick something with plenty of RAM and a solid speed boost over the default. And while speed will almost certainly be your highest priority, filesystem performance is important as well. It seems that out-of-the-box options for the default filesystem (ext4) are actually quite slow. If that is true, then is there a disadvantage to using XFS or Btrfs instead? Is one faster than the other and if so why? A: Btrfs is designed for large files; it has many features designed to increase performance under those conditions. XFS is designed for large files. ext4 is designed for files up to a few gigabytes. As far as I know, XFS has faster fsck (file system check). There are also features in Btrfs that aren't in XFS (like snapshots, LVM, etc.) which may make it more "future-proof" in general, but I don't know that one way or another. A: Btrfs is probably on par with XFS in terms of performance, but I would probably use it on a large file server. It has a lot of features that will be very useful to you. For example, it has hot-spare capacity which will help to ensure your data is always available if a server fails or needs to be upgraded. It has its own journal, which is designed to be faster than ext4's

A newly discovered cache of priceless ancient ceramics has added to questions about how much the pharaohs were worth. The statues depict a man and a woman, probably royal lovers, and a man in a long white wig. They are the most important discovery of 2013, and experts are debating how much the items should be worth. The items, dating to the reign of one of Egyptian rulers of the late Old Kingdom period, were found in a tomb in Giza, north of Cairo. They were discovered during a joint excavation between the Egyptian Ministry of Antiquities and British Museum by Egyptian and British archaeologists. They were found next to a number of pieces of exquisite gold jewelry and decorated copper statues of the
