Tip You can download a free 50-day trial of Photoshop CS6 from Adobe's website at: You need to create an account with Adobe to access this trial version. # Appendix: Photoshop on a Mac A major difference between the Mac and Windows version of Photoshop is that the Mac version of Photoshop works with an Open Exports panel on the desktop instead of a Photoshop window. If you're a PC guy, you might find this a little off-putting. Fortunately, it's not actually any worse than the Windows version. You just need to remember to call the Open Exports panel the same name as the Photoshop window, so that you can go from the button on your desk to the window. Here's how to change the name of the Photoshop window: 1. Open the Photoshop window. You can find the Photoshop window when you click the _Photoshop_app_ icon in the Applications folder. Photoshop opens into the window. 2. Choose Application → Preferences. You see the Photoshop Preferences window. The top portion of the window contains the Applications and System Preferences tabs. The Applications tab lets you select the Photoshop editor from a list of installed applications, as shown in Figure A-1. Click the Edit Preferences button to see the System Preferences tab, where you can change settings for your computer.

Photoshop Elements: Levels What Are Levels? Levels are a grayscale image's histogram. They show the brightness of each pixel in the image, with a darker side on the left, and a lighter side on the right. You can also think of a Levels adjustment as a spectrum. This spectrum adjusts the grayscale image to make the image look whiter or brighter or darker. Saturation can also be adjusted using a Levels adjustment, but only for the hue and saturation. How to Use Levels To use Levels in Photoshop, follow these steps: Click the Adjustments window's Levels icon (1). Click the pull-down menu (2). Choose Lights, Midtones, and Shadows from the menu. To desaturate the image, reduce the Levels number. Reducing the number makes the image lighter, which desaturates the image. You can make the image darker by increasing the number. To adjust the colors in the image, increase or decrease the Levels number. Increasing the number will make the image look more saturated, or have more contrast. Decreasing the number will make the image look less saturated or have less contrast. Note: You can't desaturate or adjust colors using Levels in Photoshop Elements. You can only desaturate using the Hue/Saturation adjustments. Using Levels When Editing Levels are a great tool for adjusting color and contrast in an image. You can use Levels to make the edges of an image look darker or lighter, increase or decrease the amount of contrast in an image, and more. To control how much of a particular color is in an image, check the box next to a color on the Levels palette (3). A check next to a color means that the image contains that color. A check next to a color means that the image doesn't contain that color. To reduce or remove specific colors, check the boxes next to the colors you wish to reduce or remove. To increase or remove specific colors, check the box next to the colors you wish to increase or remove. To make colors in an image blend better, check the box next to a color on the Levels palette. The boxes will blend the color and its surrounding colors together, so check the box next to the color you want to blend. When you don't check the box, the color won't blend with its surrounding colors. 05a79cecff
